FOREWORD.

In preparing the following study outline of California history, we have endeavored to give to the student a practical foundation for his work. It is not expected that he will confine himself to the references given, but by their use new avenues will be opened up which will lead him into many interesting by-paths of historical research.

The outline is intended for popular use; therefore, the references are arranged to meet the need of club women and other students who have to conserve time, and who wish to brighten their work by using historical fiction, poetry and magazine articles bearing upon the subject under consideration. The citations given refer to the editions mentioned in the bibliography following the Outline.*

It has not seemed advisable to carry the study beyond 1880. The history of California from that date to the present time is not yet in available form. What has been written on this later period has to do more with development and conservation of natural resources and advancement along social, educational, literary and artistic lines. An outline covering the above subjects may be compiled at some future time.

*The State Library has no fiction for circulation. The student will have to depend entirely upon local libraries for that service.
